Culture may take the shape and form of material culture. Or/ and it may take the form of non-material culture.

Material Culture

Material culture may be manifest in a nation's or groups architecture, the physical structures like roads, bridges, overhead, under head passes, are made the way foot paths, parks, gardens are made are all examples of material culture of a city. Some years ago a foreigner had come to Lahore visiting, when they were taken around the city, one of the foreigners said she found Lahore to be like a beautiful girl who is in deep sleep. The material culture of Lahore to a foreigner appeared to resemble a sleep beauty. This shows that culture has a dynamic identity.

Non-Material Culture

Then there is non-material culture which is expressed in one's language, the behavior and living etc. the way one dress, walks, hand/arms and gestures etc. some are expressions non material culture. Experts also put forward the view that there is diversity in cultures, as in case of Pakistan, in terms of punjabi, baluchi, pashtu etc. but there is also cultural uniformity. It refers to common perceptions, goals and patterns of behavior.

Cultural Conflicts

The differences between cultures may be very obvious, such as holiday customs, such as how to get your turn in conversations. The more subtle and unconscious differences are difficult to change or even recognize. Cultural conflicts are usually about behavior because when subtle cultural differences meet, misunderstandings are common. Different cultures may be misperceived as rude, slow or disrespectful.

Cultural Compatibility

However all cultural conflicts may not always lead to wars or battles but may result in cultural compatibility is when diverse cultural units emphasize their differences to achieve a common goal. This is indeed the scene in modern day Pakistan.

There are cultural differences in Pakistan, but the overall goal of our culture is to achieve a common goal that is the welfare and wellbeing of all compatriots living in Pakistan.

Learning Disabilities

Reasons may vary from child to child but one thing is common that these disabilities are because of some dysfunction in the central nervous system. Such difficulties usually last a person's lifetime. It may be pointed out further that some psychologists believe that such students may have normal intelligence but have some significant academic problems. Because a child is unable to read properly or write properly or is unable to comprehend any concept etc. so these problems have led students to face problems at their school. Infact, the pieces of small issues lead to a big problem. Students with learning disabilities may manifest three major reading habits that can help a teacher to identify and characterize a student with specific learning disabilities, they are

- a) Bad reading habits, where a student cries or refuses to read when a teacher expects to read. This might be hint for any disability.
- b) Word recognition error, the students may omit or add a word from his/her own side while reading.
- c) Comprehension error, a student cannot answer a question from the text. He is unable to comprehend what he has read.

If your student is facing these problems, there are chances that he has some kind of disability related to learning, so teachers should be very cautious about their students. Furthermore students, with learning abilities may manifest all/ most of the following problems;

- a) They show a lack of attention
- b) They are hyper active, too active.
- c) They are impulsive.
- d) Their memory appears impaired, what they learn today, they may forget tomorrow.

Slurred Speech

Another important symptom is that their speech may be slurred as garbled. It means a student is unable to speak clearly. This is a difficulty in making friends and are usually lonesome. Most of them are socially illegible.

Pavlov put forward the view that learning takes place by association of automatic responses with new stimuli. In a series of experiments Pavlov began by ringing a bell and recording a dog's response. As expected there was no salivation. At this point the ringing of bell was neutral stimulus because it brought forth no salivation. Then Pavlov fed the dog and the response was salivation. The food was an unconditioned stimulus (US) because no prior training or conditioning was needed to establish natural connection between food and salivation. The salivation was an unconditioned response (UR) again because it occurred automatically. Using these three elements, the food, the salivation and the ringing bell, Pavlov process best known as classical conditioning by Ivan Pavlov, a psychological laboratory and out of his experiments on animals came and explanation of how learning takes place. His experiments now experiments.

Pavlov put forward the view that learning takes place by association stimuli. In a series of experiments Pavlov began by ringing a bell : expected there was no salivation. At this point the ringing of bell was forth no salivation. Then Pavlov fed the dog and the response unconditioned stimulus (US) because no prior training or conditioning connection between food and salivation. The salivation was an unconditioned response. Using these three elements, the food, the salivation, and the bell, he demonstrated that a dog could be conditioned to salivate after hearing the bell. After repeated this several times, the dog began to salivate after hearing the bell without food. Now the sound had become a conditioned stimulus (CS) that could elicit the response of salivating. The response of salivating after ringing the bell was now a conditioned response.

Later an American psychologist B. F. Skinner conducted his own experiments on the process of learning. He began with the belief that many human behaviors could be explained by classical conditioning describes only how existing behaviors might be explained. Skinner's theory of operant conditioning explains how new operant behaviors are acquired.

LEARNER DIFFERENCES III

Not all the students have similar abilities or disabilities. Some students may have problems with communication. Research has shown that children between the ages of 6 years to 11 years form the largest group of children served by special education. It may mean that the problem of speech or communication become apparent during these formative years of 6 to 11 years. Research also shows that such students constitute about 19% of the total members of students who receive psychological services.

It is the duty of a teacher to identify students with learning/communication problems and refer them to a specialist; those with visual problems should be referred to medical doctors and those with language behavioral problem should be referred to psychologists.

Language disorders may arise from many sources, because so many different aspects of the individual are involved in learning language. A child with a hearing impairment will not learn to speak normally. A child who hears inadequate language at home will learn inadequate language. Children who are not listened to, whose perception of the world is distorted by emotional problems (fear, terror, and lack of routine), or who reflect these problems in their language development. Because speaking involves movements; an impairment of the motor functions involved with speech can cause language disorders. And because
