Piaget ignores ----- in his theory.

Select the correct option

- individual differences
- nature of stages

- development through stages

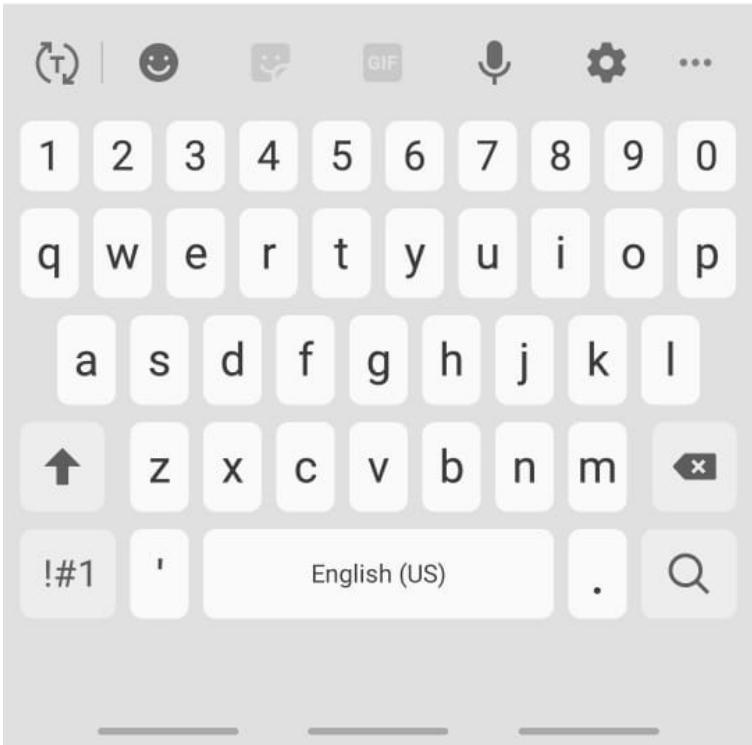

individual's behavior is modified by its antecedents and consequences.

Operant conditioning is distinguished from classical conditioning (or respondent conditioning) in that operant conditioning deals with the reinforcement and punishment to change behavior. Operant behavior operates on the environment and is maintained by its antecedents and consequences, while classical conditioning is maintained by conditioning of reflexive (reflex) behaviors, which are elicited by antecedent conditions. Behaviors conditioned through a classical conditioning procedure are not maintained by consequences. They both, however, form the core of behavior analysis and have grown into professional practices.

Topic 20: B.F Skinner – Skinner box

- B.F Skinner conceived the term "Operant Conditioning".
- He put a rat in a box and trained it to pull a lever to get it by not feeding it until it would pull the lever.
- He found that behavior did not depend on the preceding stimulus as Watson and Pavlov maintained.
- Instead, Skinner found that behaviors were dependent upon what happened.

- Pavlov
- Thorndike

Operant conditioning (or instrumental conditioning) is a type of learning in which an individual's behavior is modified by its antecedents and consequences.

Operant conditioning is distinguished from classical conditioning (or respondent conditioning) in that operant conditioning deals with the reinforcement and punishment. Operant behavior operates on the environment and is maintained by its consequences, while classical conditioning is maintained by conditioning behaviors, which are elicited by antecedent conditions. Both operant conditioning procedures are not maintained by consequences. They both are part of behavior analysis and have grown into professional practices.

Topic 26: Theoretical Approach

- Cognitive theories focus on the conceptualization of students' learning processes:

How information is:

- Received,
- Organized,
- Stored, and
- Retrieved by the mind

Cognitive theories are considered more appropriate for explaining complex forms of learning like reasoning, problem solving, information processing, etc.

- Goal of Instruction: to transfer knowledge to the students in the most efficient and effective manner possible.
- Focus: The design of environment to optimize that, transfer with efficient processing strategies.

Topic 27: Difference between Cognitivism & Behaviourism

Behaviourism: Observable behavior and the response of humans to environmental stimuli.

efficiently efficiency effcient

COMPARING THEORIES II*Topic 265: Goals of Instruction*Behaviorism

- Communicate or transfer behaviors representing knowledge and skills to the learner (does not consider mental processing)

Cognitivism

- Teachers/designers are responsible for assisting learners in organizing information in an optimal way so that it can be readily assimilated.

Constructivism

- Instruction is a process of supporting knowledge construction rather than communicating knowledge.

Topic 266: Instructional Models*Behaviorism*Information Transferring

- This model represents information transferring to some extent as a computer model.
- It can be related to computer input-process-output; involves subroutines or procedures.

Cognitivism*Keller's ARCS Model of Motivation

- Proposed four conditions for a learner to be motivated to learn- attention, relevance, confidence and satisfaction- when integrated, motivate one to learn.

Constructivism
