(03 Marks) Questions

Q. Attribution theory

It focuses on how people explain the causes of their own successes and failures. Few scholars describe attribution theory in terms of four explanations for success and/or failure in achieving a personal objective: ability-, effort, perceived difficulty of a task, and luck. Two of those four factors are internal to the Learner: ability and effort; and two are attributable to external circumstances outside of the learner: task difficulty and luck. According to Weiner, learners tend to explain, that is, to attribute, their success on a task on these four dimensions Depending on the individual, a number of causal determinants might be cited.

Q. Piaget cognitive theory

Piaget's theory of cognitive development explains how a child constructs a mental model of the world. He disagreed with the idea that intelligence was a fixed trait, and regarded cognitive development as a process which occurs due to biological maturation and interaction with the environment. According to Piaget, children are born with a very basic mental structure on which all subsequent learning and knowledge are based. To Piaget, cognitive development was a progressive reorganization of mental processes as a result of biological maturation and environmental experience.

Children construct an understanding of the world around them, and then experience discrepancies between what they already know and what they discover in their environment.

There Are Three Basic Components To Piaget's Cognitive Theory:

Schemas: building blocks of knowledge.

Adaptation processes that enable the transition from one stage to another (equilibrium, assimilation, and accommodation).

Stages of Cognitive Development: sensorimotor, preoperational, concrete operational,
